

Procurement offices and staff across the nation are actively engaged in the battle against the Coronavirus. They are bidding on personal protective equipment (PPE), life-saving ventilators, technology for employees who are now working remotely, and educational items for millions of school children who are adjusting to learning online. They are identifying innovative solutions such as 3-D printing of PPE and partnering with local distilleries to source hand sanitizer. They are working around the clock in an environment no one has seen before, and they are committed to doing everything they can to support their citizens.

NASPO is proud to support public procurement officials from all levels who are working under extraordinary conditions to purchase the supplies every state needs to fight the Coronavirus pandemic. We thank them for their efforts, and we invite you to share your thanks as well.
